Everybody's Talking!

Nest retreat: In the forested outskirts of Harads, Sweden, visitors can stay inside a suspended structure called Biosphere, wrapped in hundreds of small birdhouses. The rounded suite is reached by an elevated walkway and offers windows on every side so guests can watch the surrounding wildlife. Its designers worked with bird specialists to turn the structure into habitat as well as lodging, adding shelters sized for many regional species. Inside, the room uses dark tones and wide sightlines to bring the colors and movement of the trees into the space. A rooftop platform provides a full-circle view of the woods and the nearby river. The project blends conservation ideas with design, inviting travelers to sleep among the creatures it helps support.

Golden books: Long before online videos shaped what kids read and watched, Little Golden Books changed how families brought stories into their homes. Instead of relying on expensive hardcovers or whatever was available at the library, parents could pick up these colorful titles at grocery counters and newsstands. The small format made them easy for children to handle, and the bright covers stood out from other books of the time. As the series grew, it added familiar characters and simple stories that appealed to many households. Publishers began to notice the demand for affordable books made for everyday use. The format continues to adapt, helping new generations discover reading in an approachable way.

Ocean retreat: Off the southern coast of Norway, diners descend into an underwater dining room set partly below the sea, where a wide viewing pane looks onto drifting kelp and passing fish. The restaurant was engineered to withstand strong currents and harsh coastal weather, while its rough concrete exterior encourages marine life to attach and form a growing reef. Researchers use the structure to study underwater conditions with sensors placed around the building. In the kitchen, chefs rely on nearby waters for ingredients, often choosing species that are usually ignored. It's a reminder that a restaurant can operate responsibly while staying closely tied to its environment.

Honey shield: Conservation teams are testing whether active beehives can help protect marula trees from foraging elephants in a private reserve in South Africa. Their idea draws on earlier research showing that elephants tend to avoid buzzing swarms near sensitive areas on their faces. Some trees are fitted with hives, others with wire, and the rest are left unprotected so researchers can track differences over time. The hives also produce small batches of natural honey that local supporters have eagerly welcomed. Beeswax products have followed, adding another way to use the project's work. By pairing tree protection with beekeeping, the team hopes to support both wildlife and nearby communities.

Lucky numbers this week: This week's odds favor Sagittarius winners with the luckiest number being 33.

Did You Know...

Divine fungi: Ancient Egyptians believed mushrooms were gifts from the gods, born from lightning striking the earth. Considered food of immortality, they were reserved for pharaohs; ordinary people were forbidden to touch the sacred delicacies.

Mysterious muse: For centuries, the true face behind Leonardo da Vinci's "Mona Lisa" has kept scholars guessing. Most now suspect she was a Florentine woman named Lisa Gherardini, whose steady gaze became one of history's most studied portraits.

Hidden ties: Coastal redwoods can grow to incredible heights even though their roots reach only about six to 12 feet (2 to 4 m) deep. They stay upright by linking roots with neighboring trees, creating a vast network that anchors the entire forest.

Cover debut: When Rolling Stone launched, John Lennon appeared on its very first cover, marking the start of a long parade of music legends to do so. From Bob Dylan to Madonna, many artists have made their mark on the magazine's front page.

Naming continents: Italian explorer Amerigo Vespucci realized the lands across the Atlantic were not part of Asia but a separate continent. When mapmakers later documented his findings, they used his first name, giving "America" its place on the map.

On the Lighter Side

Why did the orange only go halfway up the hill? It ran out of juice.

A helper at a shoeshine parlor is called a bootician.

Do I have a time machine? Of course, I do! We go way back!

Dad: "I was told you skipped school to watch football today!"
Son: "I didn't and I have the movie ticket to prove it!"

Knock! Knock! Who's there? Freddie. Freddie who? Freddie or not, here I come!
